Terry Goddard to Address Prescott City Council Regarding Meth Crisis

(Phoenix, Ariz. – Nov. 4, 2005) Attorney General Terry Goddard will talk to the Prescott City Council Tuesday about the growing meth crisis in Arizona and efforts being taken by his office to combat this epidemic.

Earlier this year, Goddard championed legislation that would have made it more difficult for meth cookers to obtain pseudoephedrine, the key ingredient needed to produce meth. This legislation was supported by more than 50 law enforcement agencies throughout Arizona.

"We are experiencing a public health crisis with meth," Goddard said. "Meth cookers are poisoning our children, putting our public safety officers in unacceptable dangers and imposing high costs on taxpayers, businesses, healthcare systems and the environment."

Statistics show meth is closely connected to a wide range of other crimes, including domestic abuse, child endangerment and identity theft.
